Mrs. James A. Gray, Mrs. S. Proctor Brady, Mrs. Pembroke Thompson, Mrs. Paul Haupt, Mrs. Marsden, Mrs. Mary Carrington Brown, Miss Adeline Huger, Miss Alice Worthington Hall, Miss Mary Carrington Brown and Miss Cochran."

Home Wedding.

Quantities of pink and white flowers against a background of ferns and palms decorated the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Davis, near Westboro, yesterday afternoon at 3:30 o'clock, when their daughter, Miss Cora Estelle Davis, was married to Edwin Earl Marston, son of H. F. Marston. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. W. B. Jett, of Nottoway, and Miss Phyllis Davis played the "Lohengrin" wedding march at the entry of the bride. The bride's "Serenade" was rendered very softly during the ceremony. Thoroughly the lower floor of the house was draped with vines and spring flowers was used, and all of the lights were shaded in rose color.

BARONET BEHIND BAR AS DRINK DISPENSER

Seven-Year Endeavor to Gain Means of Livelihood for Himself and Family.

BY LA MARQUISE DE PONTENAY.
WHEN one finds a baronet of ancient lineage serving drinks from behind the bar of a public house, it is usually because he has come down in the world, and met with reverses. This is not, however, the case with Sir Henry Echlin, eighth baronet of his house, who has just given up his license as publican of the Seven Stars, at Blodwell, in Buckinghamshire, at the end of a seven years' endeavor to make the place pay sufficient to furnish the means of livelihood for himself, Lady Echlin, and his twenty-year-old daughter, Margaret. For Sir Henry, whose only surviving grandchild, the Duke of Devonshire, is the eighth baronet, began life as a footman to the late Sir Gerald Aylmer, at Donadea Castle, in County Kildare, and in London. After the death of his master, he was enlisted as a private in the Second Life Grenadier Guards, and deserted; and then joined the Liverpool police, where he used to see his name printed every day in the Police Gazette as a deserter, and was instructed, in consequence of that, to get out of the country. He was captured and arrested of the fugitive, that is to say, of himself. Eventually he surrendered to the military authorities. The officers composing the court-martial were so highly entertained with the idea of his being a deserter, that they let him off with a merely nominal punishment.

Subsequently, he became barman in a public house, that is to say, saloon. In consequence of this, he was set up in business for himself by one of the great breweries or gin distilleries, and has kept in turn the Wheelwrights Arms, at Marlow, the Criterion, at Windsor, the Rupert Arms, at Reading, the Red Lion, at High Wycombe, the Rose and Crown, at Woburn, and, last of all, the Seven Stars, in Blodwell.

Sir Henry's daughter is a school teacher, and as such possessed of a considerably greater amount of education than her parents. Her training is that which is customary in people of the domestic servant and bartender class. He has no sons, and on his death his baronetcy will go to his only son, John Echlin, who, until recently, was station master of a small village station on the Midland Railroad of Ireland, but has now a minor place in the Dublin offices of that company. He has three sons, all of them engaged in business, and the baronet of the title becoming extinct.

One of his sisters, Emily by name, makes her home on this side of the Atlantic, being married to an American farmer of the name of Bernard Nelson, of New Arbor, Mich.

The Echlins are a very ancient Scottish family, the history of which, dating back to the twelfth century, may be found at the British Museum, in a little book of the eighteenth century, entitled "Members of the Antient Family of the Echlins of Scotland, in the County of Fife, Scotland, now Transplanted to Ireland." An Echlin was constable and deputy governor of Edinburgh Castle during the siege of the city by the Jacobites in 1746.

The Right Rev. Dr. Henry Echlin Bishop of Down and Connor, by patent dated March, 1813. He achieved considerable note by his persecution of the Presbyterians in Belfast, and was considered there in a particularly barbarous fashion. His great-grandson and namesake, Henry Echlin, was judge of the Court of the Exchequer of Ireland, and received his baronetcy for his services on the bench.

The third and fourth baronets distinguished by gambling and every form of extravagance, including costly litigation, the once large property of the family in Ireland, and Sir Henry's father, the late Sir Ferdinand Echlin, as well as the family of the baronet and predecessor, Sir Frederick Echlin, succeeded to nothing else but the barren title, being compelled to resort to humble means of livelihood in order to keep themselves from starving, both of them dying in a pauper's hospital in the workhouse at Edenderry, in County Kildare. I have but briefly touched upon the story of the extraordinary vicissitudes of this Echlin family, which constitutes one of those romances of genealogy that Thomas Hardy, the novel and short story writer, has turned to such admirable account in his "Tess of the d'Urbervilles."

It seems difficult to realize that there is any one living to-day who is able to describe in any detail a scene so remarkable as that which took place at St. Petersburg, in 1825, when Nicholas I., shortly after his accession, showed himself suddenly and quite alone amidst the mob of insurgents who crowded the plaza in front of the Winter Palace, clamoring for his death, in order that his elder brother, Grand Duke Constantine, might take his place. Nicholas knew that he could not rely upon the troops, whose loyalty was wavering. It was only by a coup de theatre that he could save the situation. This coup was his appearance without a single attendant, among the crowd, which he dominated by his enormous stature. Taking advantage of the sudden silence caused by his dramatic advent upon the scene, he, in a voice the metallic tones of which could be heard far and wide, ordered the crowd to its knees. In a moment they obeyed, and the insurrection was at an end.

The survivor of this historic spectacle is the venerable Princess, the late Sayn-Wittgenstein, nee Princess Bariatinaki, who, born shortly after the battle of Waterloo, was a girl of ten, and living with her father, a great dignitary of the Russian court, in the Winter Palace, from the windows of which she saw the entire affair. To-day, at the age of ninety-eight, she lives all the year round at her beautiful villa at Ouchy, near Lausanne, on the beautiful shores of the Lake of Geneva, where, retaining in the most astonishing degree all her mental faculties, her marvelous memory, and a still more surprising physical vigor, she is engaged in the completion of another and final volume of "Reminiscences."

Her villa is a house of pilgrimage to many crowned heads and royal and imperial personages, and few of them ever visit Switzerland without calling upon her. Thus, the Dageuer Grandduchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, herself near a nonagenarian, and the only surviving granddaughter of King George III. of England, has lately been paying her a visit. One of the old princess's most intimate friends and constant visitors was the late Empress Augusta of Germany, who made numerous stays at the Sayn-Wittgenstein villa at Ouchy.

The so-called December insurrection of 1825 at St. Petersburg, was not only one that the aged princess has witnessed, but she was in Paris when the Revolution of July broke out, and in 1830, which drove King Charles X. and his infant grandson, Henry V, to exile, and resulted in the accession to the throne of the Duke of Orleans, she was in Paris. She was again in 1815, when she was at Berlin, and was a witness of the scene when King Frederick William IV. and his Queen were obliged by the mob to stand on the balcony of their palace, the King waving his hand in token of respect to the dead bodies of the insurgents, as they were carried past in a never-ending procession, killed by the bullets of the royal troops.

In 1870, the princess was at Coblenz with Empress Augusta, who, yearning above everything else for the restoration of peace with France, asked her if there was not one person whom she knew in France who would have the power, the prestige, and the authority, to initiate in behalf of that nation negotiations for peace with France. The princess mentioned the famous Monsignor Dupanloup, bishop of Orleans. Empress Augusta was delighted, and obtained an intimation from Emperor William, and from Prince Bismarck, at Versailles, that they would welcome any steps that the bishop might take in that direction, and also that he would be most acceptable as a mediator.

Princess Sayn-Wittgenstein left Coblenz, accompanied to the railroad station by Empress Augusta, and provided with all sorts of German safe conduct, in order to personally urge the Bishop of Orleans and his Tours, to undertake the mission. But by the time that the princess had reached Orleans, she received a telegram from Empress Augusta, stating that the Bishop would no longer be acceptable as an emissary of peace. In view of the fact that a few days previously he had issued a pastoral letter, inciting the members of his diocese, and, indeed, all patriotic Frenchmen, to resist to the very last the Prussians, who he charged to the hilt, for oppressing Emperor William to Attila, who in ancient days, was known as "The Scourge of God."

COUNCIL OPPOSES CHANGE OF NAME

Delegates to Episcopal General Convention Instructed to Vote Against It.

DELEGATES INVITED TO V. M. I.

Unanimous Action on Measure Favoring Freedom From Dis-cise in Men Wishing to Marry.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

Lexington, Va., May 28.—The Council of the diocese of Southern Virginia, Protestant Episcopal Church, this afternoon adopted strong resolutions opposing changing the name of the church. The committee, composed of Revs. J. Cleveland Hall, David W. Howard, C. Craventon Bryan, H. and Thomas S. Wilson, and Rev. R. W. Watts, brought in a memorial, which was unanimously adopted, and which gave a number of reasons why the change should not be made on substance as follows: First, here in Virginia, where the church was first planted in the new world in the diocese in which the change of the name of the church stands as a link between our forefathers and ourselves, a change of name would be disastrous. Second, it would misrepresent the church. Third, it would occasion confusion in titles to property. Fourth, this story has defined Protestantism as the inalienable liberty of a Christian layman, and Episcopacy has offered law the only safeguard to that liberty; therefore, representatives to the general convention are instructed to vote against its influence against any change of name whatsoever.

Judge Watts, of Portsmouth, presented to the council, while this question was under discussion, a full and historical statement of the value of the word Protestant in the name of the church. This paper was ordered printed and a copy furnished to each of the delegates to the general convention. The council unanimously went on record this afternoon favoring "freedom from communicable diseases of immoral organ" in men wishing to marry, and ministers of the diocese were urged to secure the co-operation of physicians in the matter. Other denominations were invited to cooperate in this great moral question. The resolution was introduced by Rev. Robert B. Nelson, of Blacksburg, and was adopted without a dissenting vote. The resolution, of ex-communication, member of the State Board of Health, presented a paper on the far-reaching effects of "Immoral Communicable Diseases." The delegates were invited to visit the Virginia Military Institute this afternoon and witness the exercises of the manual and dress parade by the cadets.

Diocesan missions was the subject at to-night's session. A portion of the time was also given to business.
